THANK YOU FOR BEING A GOOD NEIGHBOR

Bountiful Blooms

Nothing says summer like a beautiful display of bountiful, container-overflowing blooms. To start, simply find a container with good drainage and room for your growing plant (small pots restrict plant roots and dry out quickly).

Here are some additional tips for a healthy garden:

Choose a soil-less planting medium or potting mix designed for containers. Container gardens have different needs than plants growing in the ground, so choose a mix especially designed for containers. It should drain rapidly but retain enough moisture to keep roots evenly moist. Such mixes are lightweight and free from weed seeds. You can find them at any garden center.

Calculate your sunlight. To determine which flowers will grow most successfully in your containers, first determine how much sunlight the area gets each day. Most plants need at least six hours of direct sunlight daily. Some can use even more. Choose only those plants that will grow most successfully in your conditions.

Fertilizer. Fertilizer is especially important for container gardens because it washes out when you water the plants. Add soluble fertilizer every two to four weeks, especially if your potting medium doesn't include fertilizer.
